

ELLEN COOPERPERSON ⌘ BIOGRAPHY ⌘

Ellen Cooperperson's vast knowledge of Organizational Development, Culture Change Management and Communications, coupled with over 30 years of diverse professional experience, has distinguished her as a leading corporate educator, executive coach and business strategist. She has produced extraordinary results in both internal and external management consulting positions and in Executive Leadership roles. Her strategic organizational development initiatives have boosted employee effectiveness, connected structure with resources, strategy and reward systems and maximized individual, team and corporate performance.

Career Highlights

- Began her career as a Regional Manager for the Hershey Foods Corporation.
- In 1978, founded and became the Executive Director of the Women's Education and Counseling Center for the State University of New York where she designed and delivered educational programs for adult learners entering technical and non-traditional careers.
- Founded Corporate Performance Consultants, Inc in 1986 and grew it to become one of the leading Organizational Development, Customized Training, Process Improvement and Cultural Change Management firms in the Northeast.
- Among numerous honors, Ms. Cooperperson earned the American Society for Training and Development's top awards for "Best in Training" and "Excellence in Organizational Transformation" as well as the Achievers Award from the Long Island Center for Business and Professional Women and the Top 50 Women award from the Long Island Business News.
- Featured over the years in numerous publications including The New York Times, Newsweek, Time, Newsday and the Wall Street Journal, among others.

Ms. Cooperperson holds a Master of Arts degree in Organizational Development, is a Master Practitioner in Neuro-Linguistic Programming (NLP) and she is an adjunct faculty member of the Cornell School of Labor and Industrial Relations.